

RETENTION RADAR

Coordinator Guide — how the report works, and how to make this role count.

This is one of the most important roles in the studio, and we want you to know that. Every member on this report chose to walk through our door at least once, and what happens next, whether they stay or quietly drift away, often comes down to whether someone noticed and reached out. Keeping an existing member is far more valuable than winning a new one, so every call you make is protecting both the studio and someone's routine, community and wellbeing. The colours on this report are not a to do list. They are a list of people who are still deciding whether they belong here, and you get to help them feel like the answer is yes.

What each colour means

Section	What to do
 Red — Urgent	Ghost (14+ days absent) or barely attending and declining. Call today.
 Amber — Sliding	Declining fast vs her own average, not urgent yet. Call this week.
 Blue — Watch	Worth keeping an eye on. Call if it gets worse, otherwise monitor.
 Green — New / Thriving	New members: welcome them. Thriving: a quick, genuine acknowledgment, not a task.
 Teal — Welcome back	Just came off suspension. Warm re-engagement call, not a retention pitch.
 Purple — Suspended	On hold. No outreach, just visible so nothing gets missed.
 Grey — Cancelled	Given notice, still in her notice period. Tracking her exit, not a retention call.
 Gold/Bronze/Silver/Teal — Milestone Watch	Hit a lifetime class milestone. Celebration, optional call, good news only.

Every card has these

Call button taps to dial her number directly, matched from the contacts report. Contacted / Cancelled / On hold tick after each call. Saves automatically to this device, close the tab and come back later, your progress is exactly where you left it. Notes anything worth remembering about her. Stays attached to her name every week, even if she moves between sections, it only disappears if she leaves the studio for good. Flag for owner for anything that isn't yours to solve (a billing dispute, an upset member). Raises it straight into the owner's escalations box with your note attached.

Suspended, cancelled & milestone cards

Suspended is sorted with the soonest return date at the top. Each card has a reason dropdown, pick one and it stays there every week until she's back active or gone. Cancelled shows her notice given and notice end dates automatically. Tick Exit Interview once you've had that conversation, if the notice period ends and it still isn't ticked, the card keeps showing as a reminder rather than disappearing. Milestone Watch (if your studio has this on) flags members within 3 classes of a lifetime milestone. Take the photo, add her to the studio wall, hand over her prize, then tick Celebrated. This one resets fresh every week, it's a celebration, not a task queue.

How to open the call, by category

-  Urgent Lead with genuine concern rather than a pitch. Something like “we noticed you’ve been away and just wanted to check in” will always land better than anything that sounds like a sales call.
-  Sliding Frame it as noticing rather than policing. You are not catching them out, you are closing a gap before it becomes something bigger.
-  Watch Keep it light. There should be no urgency in your voice here, this is a gentle nudge, not an intervention.
-  New members Bring energy and warmth. The first couple of weeks decide whether a membership turns into a habit, so this is where your enthusiasm matters most.
-  Welcome back Don’t mention the absence unless they bring it up themselves. Just be glad to see them.

A tip that works: when you can, send a voice message instead of a text. It takes the same amount of time, but it carries your tone and your warmth in a way that text never can, and members notice the difference. A voice message feels like it’s actually from a person who cares, because it is. If a call goes unanswered, a voicemail still counts as reaching out, even if it’s never returned.

If they say...

“I’ve just been busy”

Validate that first, then help them actually solve it. Something like “totally understand, is there a class time that might work better for you?” goes a long way. Don’t guilt them and don’t push.

“I’m injured or unwell”

Lead with empathy. Ask if a modified class or a pause would help them stay connected without the pressure of committing to full sessions.

“It’s too expensive”

Just listen. Discounting isn’t your call to make, so flag it for the owner if they want to explore options.

“I’m thinking of moving on”

Don’t try to talk them out of it. Ask what prompted the decision so we can learn from it, wish them well genuinely, and leave the door open for them to come back whenever they’re ready.

What a great week looks like

- ✓ Work through red first, then amber, then blue. The order exists because urgency is real.
- ✓ Leave a tick and a note after every call, even a quick one, so the next version of you isn’t covering the same ground twice.
- ✓ If something is outside what you can solve yourself, whether that’s billing, a complaint or a judgment call, flag it for the owner rather than letting it sit.

- ✓ When someone hits a milestone, make it feel like one. It's often the easiest and most genuine win of your whole week.

THE ONE THING TO REMEMBER

Consistency matters more than any single call. If a member doesn't answer or doesn't call back, please don't take it personally and don't be disheartened. You haven't failed, and the outreach hasn't failed either. The goal was never to guarantee a reply, it was to make sure they know we noticed, we're still here, and we haven't forgotten about them. That's what actually keeps people coming back, even the ones who don't respond right away. If you don't hear back, it's worth trying again on a different day or at a different time before moving on, rather than reading silence as a no. Just keep showing up for them, week after week, and let that consistency speak for itself.

Always open the report on the same device, that's what keeps your ticks, notes and dropdown choices saved week to week.

Every call is a chance to say: we see you, and we're glad you're here.
